

David Hicks (USA, b. 1977) is an artist currently living and working in Visalia, in the Central San Joaquin Valley of California.. His ceramics and paintings draw inspiration from nature and agricultural products and examine the formal qualities of plans and organic forms common to the American landscape. The shapes and themes he references in his practice are rooted in the fields and agricultural community surrounding his home. These organic and sometimes mechanical forms are often allegories for the human condition. His work is included in the collection of the American Museum of Ceramic Art in Pomona, CA.
